Sharonah Fredrick

Jewish piracy and anticolonial rebellion

Tuesday, January 9, 2018
Judaica Suite, 5:00 p.m.

Fredrick’s research explores different expressions of resistance against early modern colonialism in the Americas. She maps how different ethnic, religious, and social groups, subjugated or marginalized by Spanish, Portuguese, and English expansion in the New World, cooperated, shared experience, and defined their own space within the colonial system. Her graduate studies took her to Mexico and Israel, and she earned her doctoral degree in Stony Brook, New York. Currently she is Clinical Assistant Professor in the Department of Romance Languages and Literatures at University at Buffalo, SUNY. During her tenure as winner of the “Jews in the Americas” fellowship, Fredrick studies Sephardic Jews’ participation in piracy in the Caribbean and the Pacific and the broader social history of renegades in early modern Spanish America.

Eleanor Stanford

Jewish experience in post-World War II Brazil

Tuesday, January 16, 2018
Judaica Suite, 5:00 p.m.

A poet and essayist, Stanford earned her MFA in creative writing at the University of Virginia, where she also held a Henry Hoyns fellowship. Her highly praised work scrutinizes anthropological, historical, and literary questions with scholarly and literary creativity. She is currently working on a novel on the Jewish experience in post-World War II Brazil and during her tenure at UF, she explores the library holdings, especially newspapers and biographical sources, to gain further inspiration and deeper understanding of what it meant to be raised as a Jew and live a Jewish life in Brazil of the 1950s and 1960s.

The twentieth-century history of the American Jewish community center movement is the focus of Oren’s research. She is a graduate of the Carnegie Mellon University where she earned her doctorate in 2017. Her research took her to various community and academic libraries in the United States and during February 2018, as recipient of the “Jews in the Americas” fellowship, she studies the Price Library’s archival records and newspapers pertaining to the North-Central Floridian Jewish communal experience. Her research at UF contributes to her current work on her first manuscript, the revision of her dissertation to a book tentatively titled Centering the Jewish Community: Religious Pluralism and Racial Diversity in the American Jewish Community Center Movement.
A graduate of the University of Florida and currently professor at Rutgers University in New Jersey, Surowitz-Israel returns to her alma mater to study records in the holdings of the Latin American and Caribbean, Florida, and Judaica collections. Her research focuses on the early modern Atlantic and scrutinizes the institutions and regulatory practices of Portuguese Jewish communities in the Caribbean and beyond. It also examines the formation of diaspora consciousness among Portuguese Jews, and the entanglement of race and religion in colonial America. Her research as a fellow in the program “Jews in the Americas” contributes to her forthcoming monograph “May God Enlarge Japheth”: Portuguese Jews in the Early Modern Atlantic World.
Mariusz Kałczewiak

Yiddish travel writing

Tuesday, March 20, 2018
Judaica Suite, 12:00 p.m.

Kałczewiak takes his audience to South America of the early twentieth century. Focusing on the work of the Yiddish author Peretz Hirshbein, Kałczewiak explore how Yiddish literature, especially travel literature, contributed to the construction of cultural ties between Europe and the Americas. A Polish scholar, Kałczewiak earned his doctorate at Tel Aviv University and continues his research as a postdoctoral fellow at the University of Potsdam in Germany. The Price collection’s rich offerings in South American Yiddish records, including the writings by Hirshbein, support Kałczewiak’s inquiry about modern Yiddish literary tropes bridging continents and probing the modern Jewish immigrant experience in the Americas.

Argentina, (50th years of Jewish life in Argentina, 20th anniversary) Di Presse, 1938.
Pridgeon, a graduate of Emory University, currently teaches at Bates College in Maine. Her broader research addresses literary and cinematographic examinations of memory, commemoration, representation, and identity construction in conjunction with the study of Jewish–non-Jewish relations in South America. In Gainesville, during her tenure as a fellow, she expands her dissertation research on cinematographic representations of Jewish engagements with South American revolutionary movements. She examines the dynamics of political participation and cultural belonging as crucial coordinates of the South American Jewish experience in the second half of the twentieth century. Her fellowship supports the completion of her manuscript Jews on Screen and in Revolt.

Steven Baumann

Finca Paso Seco, a Jewish refugee camp in Cuba
Tuesday, August 28, 2018
Judaica Suite, 5:00 p.m.

Baumann is a doctoral student at Temple University. His interest in the history of the American Friends Service Committee, originating in the Society of Friends (Quakers) movement, led him to the study of Finca Paso Seco, a refugee camp outside of Havana, Cuba. It was established by the American Friends Service Committee and supported by the Jewish organization JOINT Distribution Committee. Baumann’s examination of the local and transnational, political and cultural aspects of the refugee camp’s everyday operation highlights the rarely told history of Jewish refugees in Cuba prior to World War II. During his tenure as a fellow, Baumann studies the Price Library’s rich offerings on the Jewish experience in Cuba, primarily focusing on newspapers.
